Video 6: Election Results

U.S. elections are run independently by thousands of local jurisdictions, each using multi-layered security protocols to ensure that every vote is counted.

This means that the final election results are not reported on election night.

But while we may not know the final results right away, we can be sure election officials are working hard to count every valid vote.

Finalizing elections in the U.S. takes time, but trustworthy results are worth the wait.
